

Stop Translating. Start Leading.

A simple shift that improves clarity in meetings

Translation slows leadership

Think → Translate → Speak (slow)

“Many professionals think in their first language”

The result:

- hesitation
- shorter contributions
- reduced authority

“Then translate before speaking”

Meetings don't wait for translation

Meetings reward presence, not correctness.

“Real meetings require: immediate responses
interruption handling positioning, not perfection”

Translation adds cognitive load
under pressure

From sentence-building to message-leading

“What decision or direction am I contributing?”

Replace this question:

“How do I say this correctly?”

With this one:

“What decision or direction am I contributing?”

The 3-Move Meeting Contribution

1. Position – where you stand

2. Reason – why it matters

3. Next step – what should happen

“From my side,
this creates a risk.
The reason is timing.
I suggest we adjust the rollout.”

What professionals notice

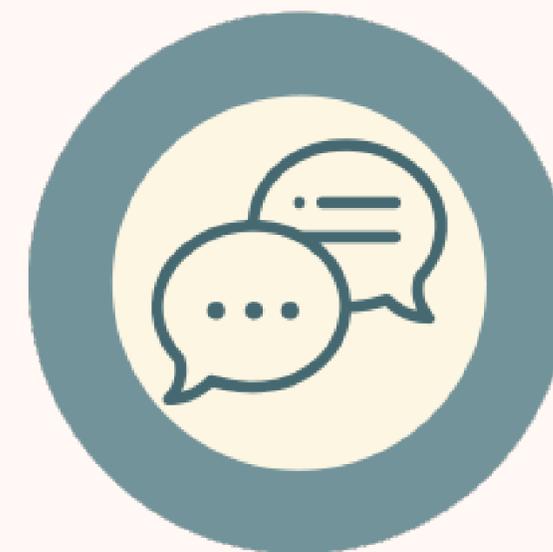

Fluency improves when focus shifts from language to leadership.

Faster
responses

Clearer framing

Less self-monitoring

More leadership presence

Fluency that works in real meetings

Explore more mini-lessons on contextual fluency

Back to Insights 